Sugar-Free Dried Fruit, Crispy Pham Chips

Gin Happy Snacks began by processing dried fruits such as strawberries, mangoes, guava, jackfruit, oranges, and pineapples. In collaboration with the National Food Institute and Kasetsart University, the brand developed sugar-free recipes using plant-based inulin, a prebiotic that supports gut health. These products are creatively paired with premium cheeses from Japan and Australia to deliver exciting new flavors unlike conventional dried fruit snacks.

Building on the success of its fruit products, the brand expanded into crispy duckweed snacks (PHAM CHIPS), also known as Wolffia, a nutrient-dense micro aquatic plant cultivated through a circular farming system. This sugar-free, prebiotic-enhanced snack is designed for teenagers, families, tourists, and health-conscious consumers in both the domestic and global markets.

Key characteristics include no bitterness, no tongue irritation, and a naturally sweet flavor with a Brix level ranging from 9 to 15, depending on the variety.

This distinctive taste profile is attributed to the unique geographical and environmental conditions of Prachinburi Province, an ancient Dvaravati-era settlement.
